John was outside playing with Kuro.

He said, "It is time to go in and have some lunch."

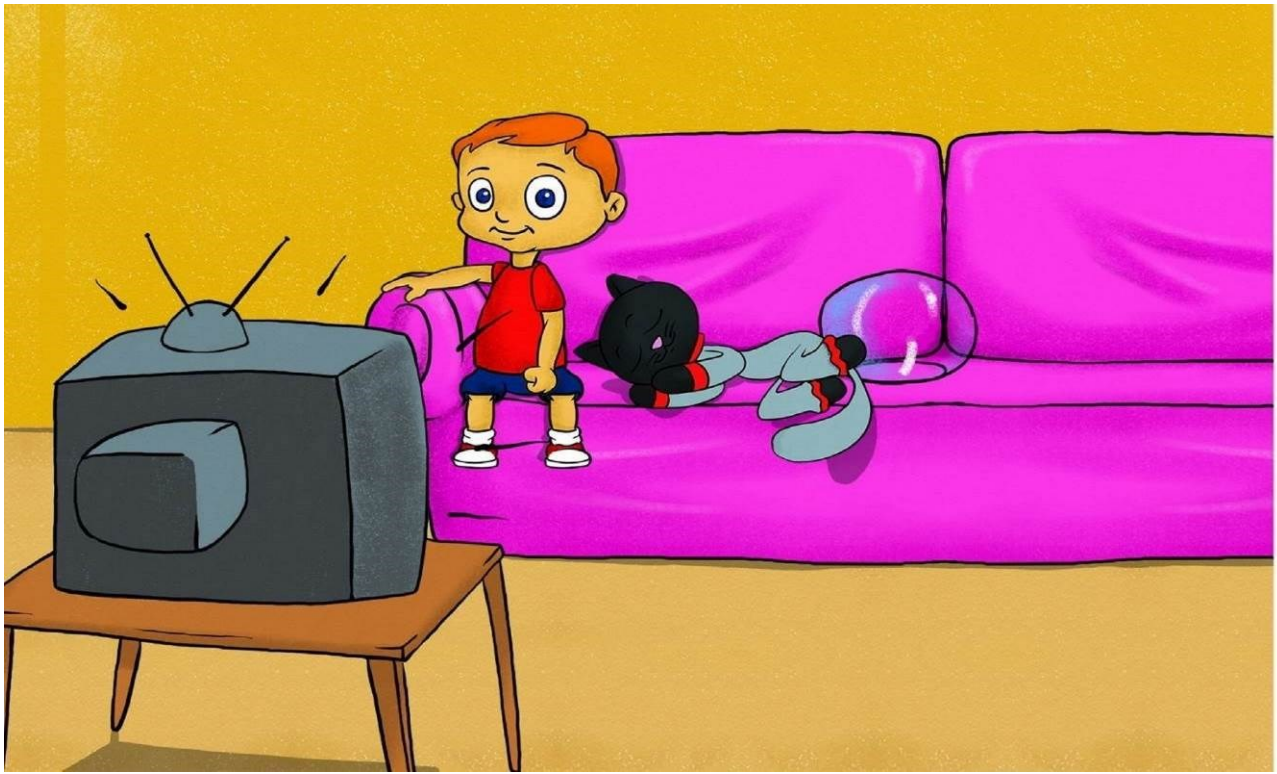
John's mother watched at the window

"Henry, Kuro is just a cat. She is not special."

Henry was John's father.

She looked again at Kuro.

"I just do not see what is special about her. She just looks like a cat!"



John went inside and watched television.

Kuro curled up beside him.

Henry looked over at Kuro. "Well, Kuro found John when he was lost, and cured Emily."

John's mother shook her head. "Henry, Kuro is only a cat, and not from Mars! That is John's imagination."

Henry was not sure.

John thought back. “Yes, I like to far-see.”

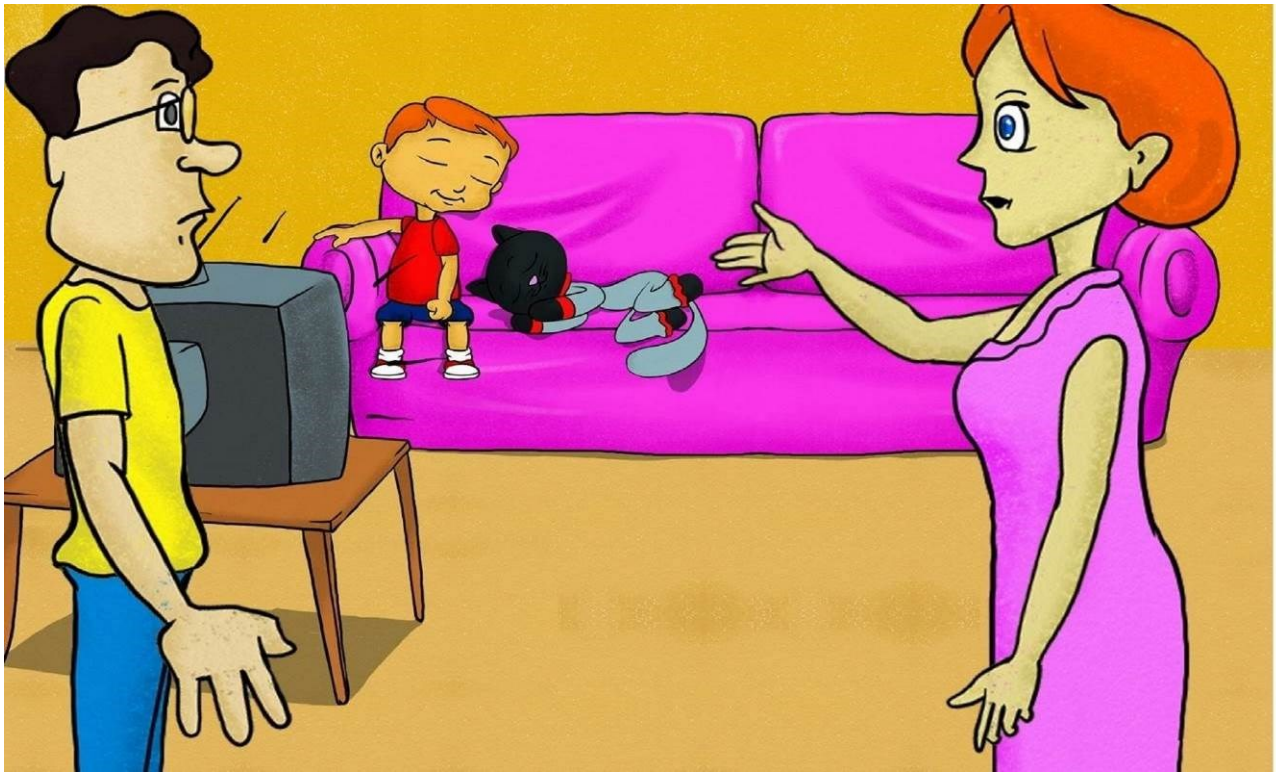
Kuro started to purr and showed John her dreaming.

John could see the world, far below. He sat back and closed his eyes.

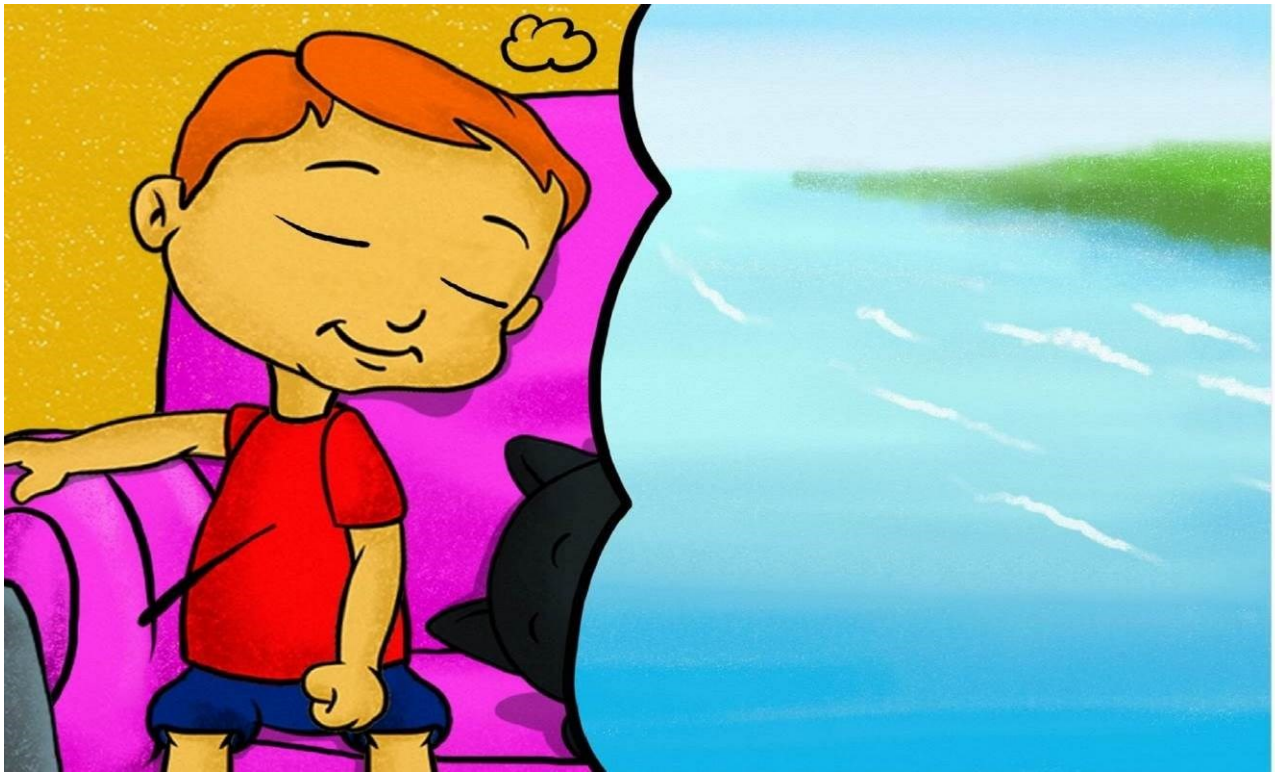


John's mother looked at them. "See Henry? They are both asleep. Kuro is only a cat."

Henry said, "I am not quite sure. She seems very special to John."

John's mother said, "Henry, Kuro is not special. She is only a cat. Do not be tricked by John's imagination."

John's mother could only see a cat.



"Of course John. You can't bring your body where we are going."

"Where is that?"

"There is a sick girl in a country called Bangladesh."

John could see the ocean, trees and water. It was hot.

“This is the edge of the Sundarbans nature reserve, John. There she is. She’s has very sick lungs.”

John saw a little girl below, with parents crying.

The doctor shook his head. “There is nothing I can do. She needs a miracle.”

"Follow me." Kuro's mind went outside. John followed.

John started to say, "That's a…."

"A Royal Bengal Tiger," thought Captain Kuro. "His name is Prince Khuram. He is a good freind."

The tiger slowly saluted. “You called me, Captain.”

“How can…?” asked John

“Just watch, John. All cats are originally from Mars, including Prince Khuram.”

Prince Khuram followed Captain Kuro back to the sick girl's home.

The girl's parents were scared.

John's mind quiet talked to them. "Prince Khuram will heal your little girl."

They looked for the voice.

Khuram placed his paw gently where the pain was. “Here, girl?”

John also heard Kuro quiet-talk to the girl. John quiet-talked to the scared parents.

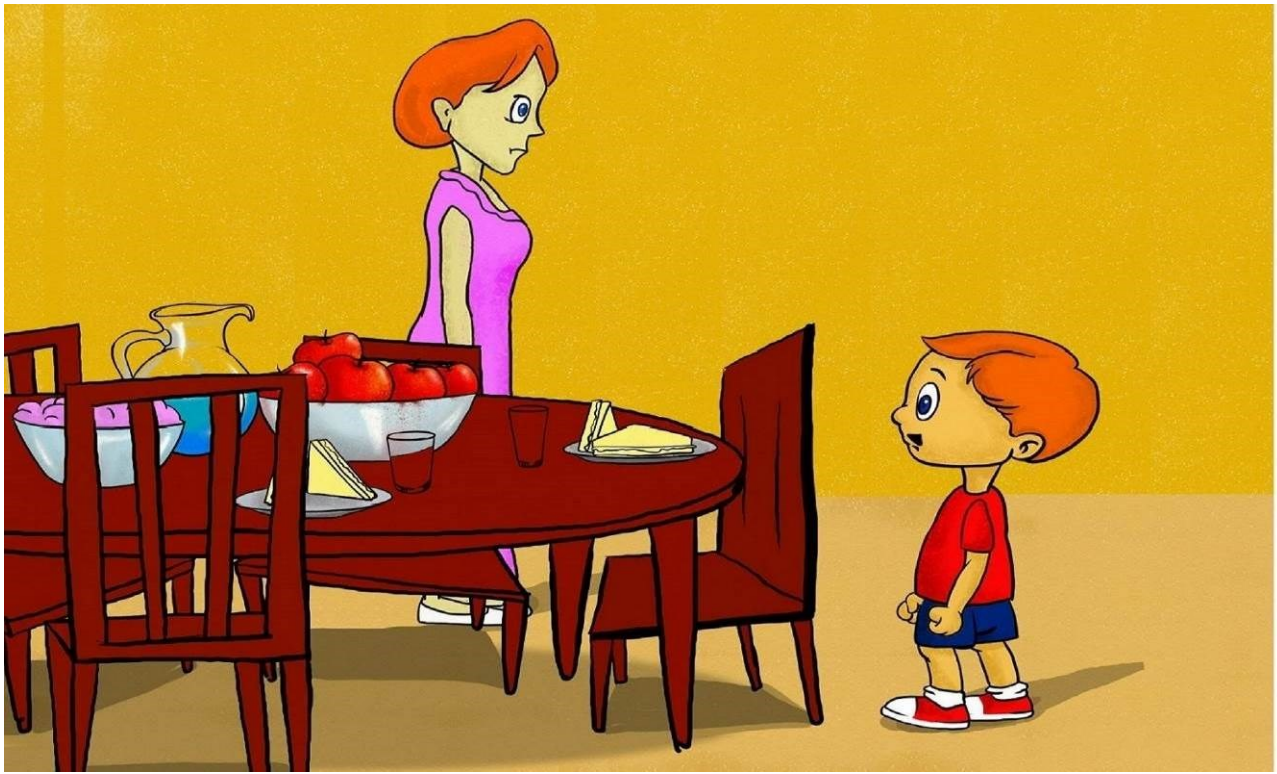
"What is your name?" Khuram thought again in quiet-talk.

"Aiyla," she thought back.

An hour later the tiger quiet-talked to the parents. “Your beautiful daughter is better, now.”

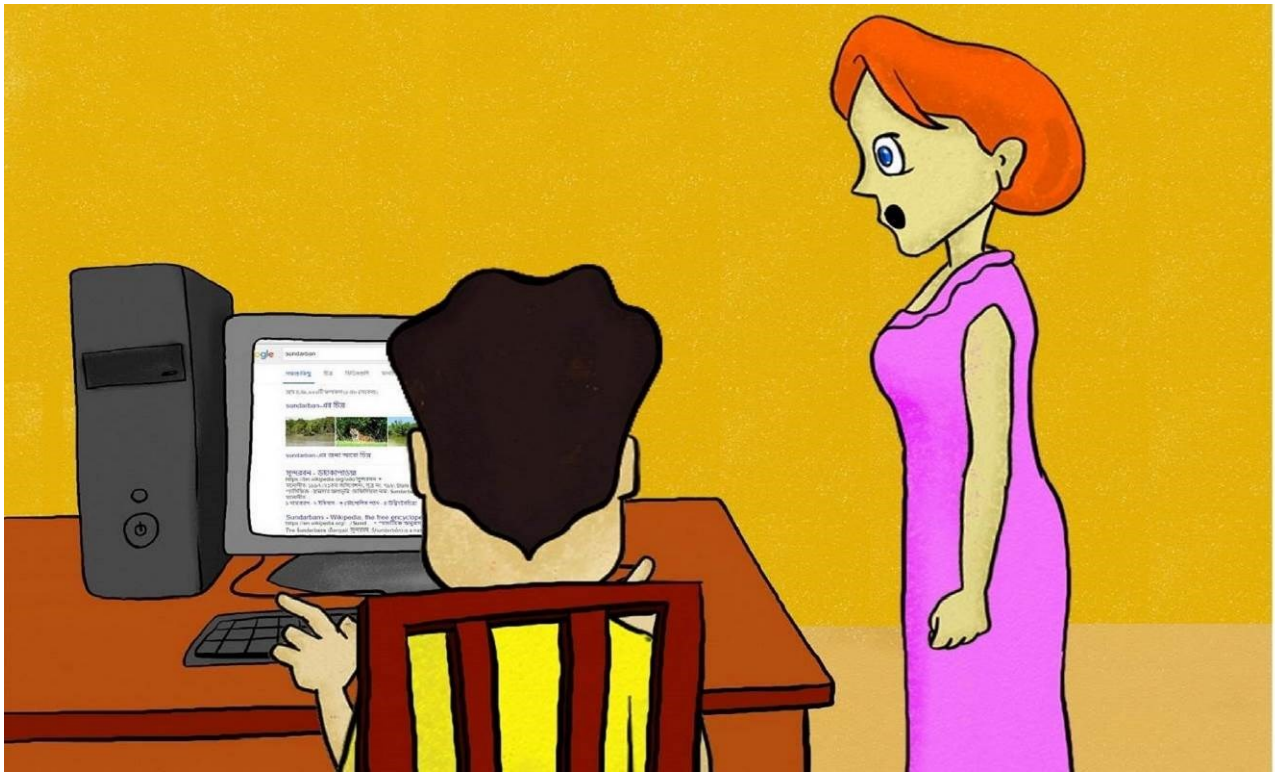
As the tiger was leaving the father said, "My Aiyla is healed. Please, don't go. Do you like fish?"

The mother looked at her husband.
" Halim, it is only a tiger!"



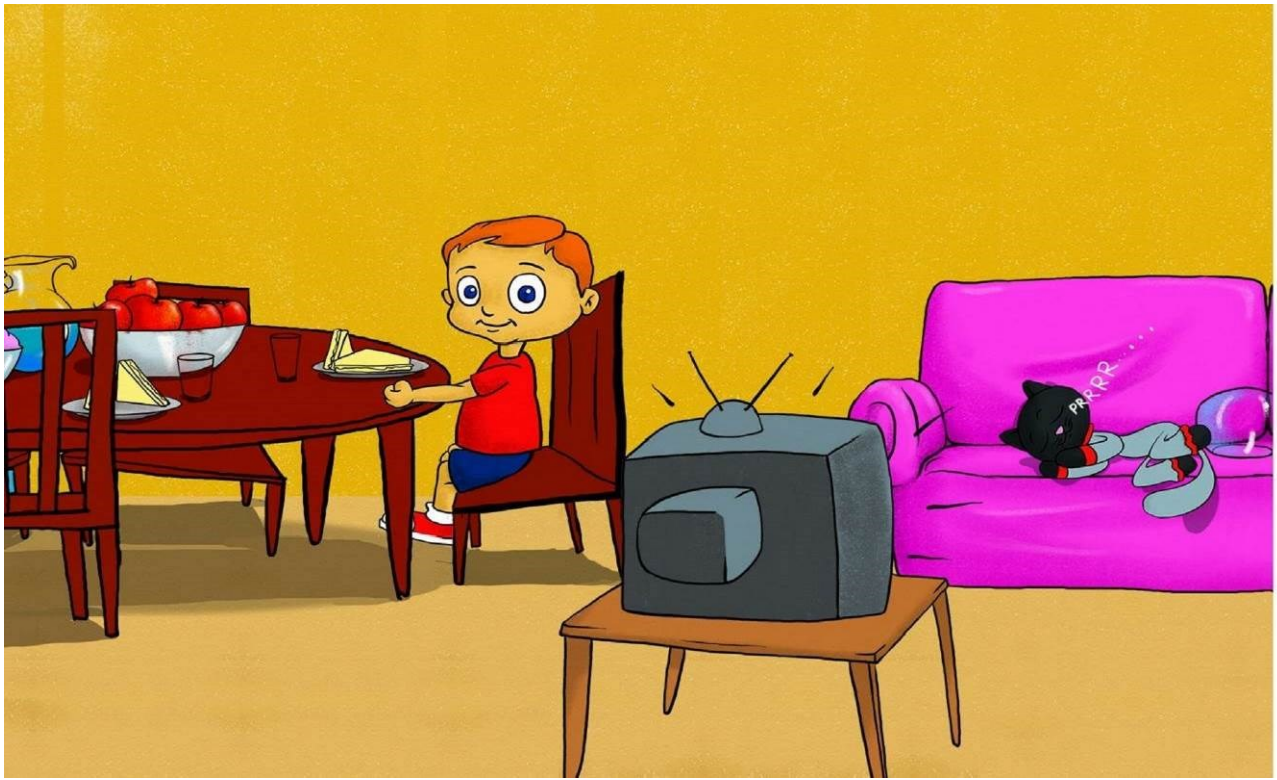
John said, “I left Captain Kuro in Bangladesh. She and Prince Khuram have more children to help near the Sunderbans."

"She will have lunch later.”



Henry typed Sundarbans on the computer.

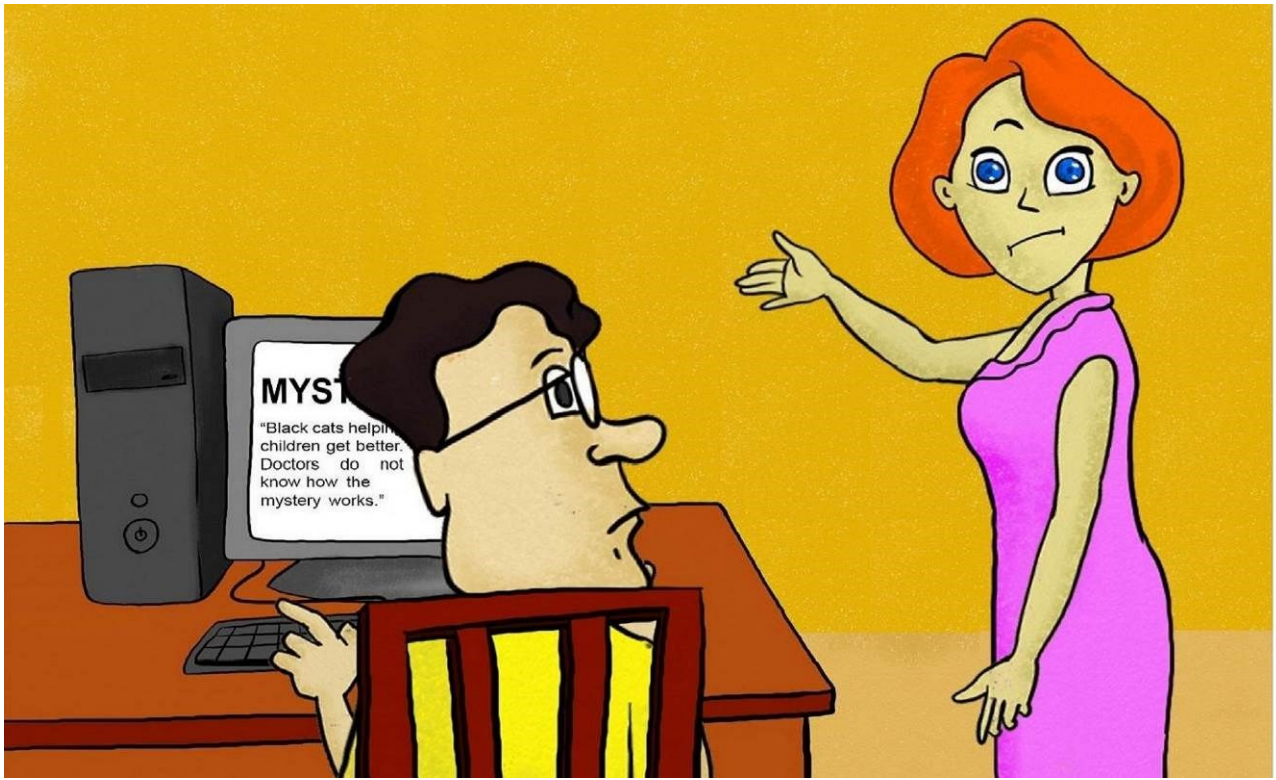
"Henry, Kuro is only a cat...." John's mother called out.



John smiled, ate lunch, and watched Kuro purring.

“Captain Kuro says she has hundreds of deputies, around the world, now. They all help her heal sick children.”

Henry typed again, and read, "Black cats helping children get better. Doctors do not know how the mystery works."



"It is just a cat, Henry! It is John's imagination."

"But Emily got better…."

"Henry, don't confuse me with facts when my mind is made up."

John smiled.

He knew, and could far-see all the Captain Kuro deputies all over the world, helping sick children.
